HEADQUARTERS OF

SLAUGHTER AT PORT ARTHUR THE BUFFALO

Lying prone the Japanese began to creep along in long lines. The Russians waited until they were beneath the walls, when part of them opened volley firing and the Japanese rolled down the hillside, dead and wounded, their rifles rattling after them.

At midnight they advanced again with reckless bravery, dashing over the hodies of their comrades, but were again repulsed.

One company of infantry, however, penetrated the line of defenses, but the Russian infantry used the bayonet and annihilated the enemy. The brave Japanese shouted "Banzai" with their last breath.

The main body of Japanese retreated over the hills and then threw searchlights upon the scene. More troops advanced, stumbling across the dead and wounded. The Russians waited until they were 100 yards away and there to the Midway islands, returning then fired their machine guns, which were protected by armor plates, and to San Francisco in the course of six mowed the enemy down like reapers cutting corn.

Again the Japanese advanced to within a fifty-yard range of the rifle volleys, but again they were hurled back.

A heavy artillery duel followed. Then once more the Japanese endeavor- today and got a jag on. He was no ed to storm the fort. There was a hand-to-hand fight and Maxims were rested at the market. His little four used. The piles of dead increased, row upon row, and wounded and dead year old child accompanied him and were mixed together. So near were the infantry and the machine guns engaged that men fired point blank at one another. As one column became demoralized another took its place.

Marching steadily forward the men broke through the Chinese wall in front of the fort and a fierce engagement ensued, 20,000 rifles crackling amid the roar of all kinds of guns. The Japanese kept their front line complete, each man stepping forward with precision to fill vacancies.

Suddenly the Russians ceased firing and, fixing bayonets, charged and swept away the first fine. Each thrust of steel went home. The Russian infantry then opened fire on the remainder, who retired in excellent order, the Japanese again returned and the fighting continued until 2 o'clock in the morning. At 3 o'clock the Japanese made another attack. They came on in the same solid masses, the men fearlessly bresting the hailstorm of lead and coolly leaping over rows of wounded. Their advance was covered by a discharge of sharpnel, but the Japanese were literally hurled back.

Daylight revealed heaps of dead banked against the fort's wall. Little occurred during the day and the next night passed quietly. The Japanese continued bringing up suppiles and constructing earthworks and, despite a terrible fire from the neighboring hills, placed sixty guns in position near the villages of Hausahem and Sanhandatan. The advance of the Japanese was like that of a swarm of locusts. They waded through streams of blood and were impaled upon lines of bayonets. Men were killed by wholesale while constructing earthworks, others stepped into the vacancies, calmly taking up picks and shovels until whole trenches

The roar of the guns was deafening and orders were given by signs.

ST. PETERSBURG, August 30 .- Direct news from Lieutenant General Stoessel, commander of the Russian military forces at Port Arthur, up to August 25, and of a favorable character, has been received here. General Stocssel's report says that the Japanese were repulsed on August 25, with Evening service heavy loss to the attackers. He gives no details of the positions held or of the Russian losses in men, but says the officers suffered severely, especially the younger men. Some of the larger Russian guns were placed out of action by the Japanese batteries and were replaced by field pieces.

The general describes the stench from the decaying bodies between the lines as being horrible. He reports that the morale of the garrison is excellent.

Finally the general recommends General Fock, Kondratenko, Smirnoff and others for bravery and devotion.
